ABSTRACT

This report focuses on the 55 largest public elementary and secondary school districts, measured by the number of students in membership, for the school year 1987-88. Information was analyzed from the 1987-88 school year Common Core of Data (CCD) series collected annually by the National Center for Education Statistics. The following summary findings are included: (1) the largest school districts are located in many parts of the country, but are mainly in the eastern third of the United States or in the sunbelt; (2) the 55 largest districts comprise less than 1 percent of all school districts but serve 17 percent of the total public elementary and secondary school population; (3) one district serves an entire state, some districts are coterminous with major cities, and other districts are located adjacent to major cities; (4) enrollments range from 939,900 to 57,100 students; (5) socioeconomic status, based on the percentage of students eligible for free lunch programs, ranges from 3 percent to 73 percent; (6) the racial/ethnic composition varies considerably, with three districts over 90 percent White, four districts predominantly Black, three districts predominantly Hispanic, and two districts in which Asian and Pacific Islanders are the norm. Statistical data are included on three graphs and nine tables. A list of the 500 largest public school districts in the United States and outlying areas for 1987-88 is appended. (FMW)

Highlights

- The largest school districts are located in many parts of the country, but are mainly in the eastern third of the country or in the sunbelt.

- The 55 largest school districts, comprising far less than 1 percent of all school districts, serve 17 percent of the total public elementary and secondary school population in this country. .

- In one case, the school district serves an entire State (Hawaii). In some cases, the school districts are coterminous with major U.S. cities (e.g., New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, and Washington, D.C.). In other cases, the school districts are located adjacent to major cities (e.g., Cobb, Gwinnett, and Dekalb County school districts serving the Atlanta, Georgia, metropolitan area).

- There is a broad range of enrollment among the largest districts: from 939,900 in New York City to 57,100 in East Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana.

- The student populations are diverse, relative to socioeconomic status. In Gwinnett County (Georgia), the percentage of students eligible for free lunch is 3 percent, while 73 percent of the students in Orleans Parish (Louisiana) qualify for the free lunch program.

- The racial/ethnic composition varies considerably in the districts studied. Three districts are over 90 percent white: the two Utah school districts (Granite and Jordan) and Jefferson County, Colorado. Four districts are predominantly black: Detroit, the District of Columbia, Memphis, and Cleveland. There are three districts in which Hispanics comprise the majority of students: Los Angeles, El Paso, and San Antonio. In two districts, Asian and Pacific Islanders form the modal racial/ethnic category: Hawaii and San Francisco.

Introduction

This is the second annual report by the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) on the largest public elementary and secondary school districts in the United States. The report focuses on the 55 largest districts (measured by the number of students in membership) in the United States for school year 1987-88. These districts are found in 25 States and the District of Columbia. (The Puerto Rico School District, smaller in size only to New York City Schools, is not included among the 55 reported.) The 500 largest school districts among the States, outlying areas, and the District of Columbia are listed in the appendix.

The first annual report was about the 25 most populous cities and the 25 largest school districts, showing the overlapping nature of the two lists and highlighting differences.* It was apparent from that report that the largest districts were not always in the most populous cities. For example, in Florida, six school districts were listed among the largest--Dade County (Miami), Broward County (Fort Lauderdale), Hillsborough County (Tampa), Duval County (Jacksonville), Palm Beach County (West Palm Beach), and Pinellas County (Clearwater)--while only one city, Jacksonville, was listed among the most populous cities.

This year's report, for school year 1987-88, provides several tables depicting the 55 largest school districts in the United States, without regard to the cities within or adjacent to their boundaries.

The 55 largest school districts serve 6.7 million students, about 17 percent of the total public elementary and secondary population of 40 million students, who are served by the 15,577 school districts in the 50 States and the District of Columbia. The largest school district in the country is New York City, with 939,900 public elementary and secondary students in 993 schools. The second largest is Los Angeles Unified District, with 589,300 students and 621 schools. The 500 largest districts serve 16,258,700 students, or 41 percent of the total public elementary and secondary school student population in the United States and outlying areas (figure 1).

Where Are the 55 Largest School Districts?

The 55 largest school districts are located in 25 States across the country, including Hawaii. Thirteen States each have one of the largest districts, while the other 42 districts are in 12 States (figure 2). Florida, with eight of the largest districts, has the most of any State. Texas has six; California and Maryland have five each; Georgia has four; and Colorado, Louisiana, North Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia each have two of the largest districts. Alabama, Arizona, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin have one district each.

Most of the States with the largest school districts are located around the periphery of the United States (figure 3). The east coast and sunbelt region have the largest numbers of large districts. The States in the interior of the country are not generally represented on the list of largest school districts, with the exception of Colorado, Kentucky, Nevada, and Utah.

Figure 3.--Location of the 55 largest school districts in the United States: School year 1987-88

In most cases, the school districts serve large central cities, such as New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Houston, or the urban fringes of large central cities, such as those located in Maryland, where three of the five largest school districts--Prince Georges County, Montgomery County, and Baltimore County--are located within the fringes of Baltimore and Washington, D.C.

A common pattern is one in which two or more companion districts serve a large metropolitan area. For example, the Atlanta City, Dekalb County, Gwinnett County, and Cobb County school districts all serve the Atlanta, Georgia, area. The Dekalb County district is, in fact, larger than the Atlanta City district. In Utah, the Granite and Jordan school districts serve Salt Lake City and Salt Lake County, and comprise 32 percent of the total public school population of the State; 46 smaller school districts serve the remaining 68 percent of students in Utah.

The configuration of school districts within State governmental units varies. Hawaii has only one school district for the entire State. In Florida, school districts are coterminous with the 67 county boundaries. California and Texas each have over 1,000 school districts, whose boundaries may or may not coincide with other governmental units.

Several of the largest school districts serve cities not generally thought of as major metropolitan areas: Memphis City in Tennessee; Jefferson County, serving Louisville, Kentucky; Virginia Beach City, Virginia; and Anne Arundel County, which includes Annapolis, Maryland.

Some populous States are notable by their absence from the list of largest school districts: New Jersey, Minnesota, and Missouri, for example. Virginia has two districts on the list--Fairfax County and Virginia Beach City--but Richmond, the State's capitol and largest city, is not on the list.

What Is the Relative Size of the 55 Largest School Districts?

Of the 15,577 school districts in the United States, the average school district has 5.3 schools, 145 teachers, and 2,548 students.

The New York City school district is by far the largest in the country, with 993 schools, 53,000 teachers, and 939,900 students. Los Angeles is next, with less than one-half (47 percent) as many teachers (25,100) as New York and 63 percent as many students (589,300). The fifth-largest school district has 10,500 teachers and 191,700 students (20 percent of New York City's total, respectively). East Baton Rouge Parish (Louisiana) school district ranks 55th on the list, has 3,400 teachers and 57,100 students, 6 percent of the New York City numbers in both categories. The last school district on the list has 11,900 students.

The table below shows the distribution, by size, of regular public school districts across the country. Almost 2,400 school districts have fewer than 150 students each; over 8,500 school districts (55 percent of all school districts) have fewer than 1,000 students.

What Are the Characteristics of Schools in the 55 Largest School Districts?

NCES classifies schools into four categories: regular, special education, vocational education, and other or alternative schools. Every school district reports some number of schools classified into one or more of the latter three categories. New York City reports 56 special education and 21 vocational education schools. Chicago reports 29 special education, 12 vocational education, and three other schools. By contrast, Orleans Parish, Atlanta City, Cobb County, and Boston each report one school in the nonregular categories. The number of students assigned to nonregular schools ranges from 43,200 in New York City to 45 in Gwinnett County (Georgia). No students are reported for the other schools in Cobb County or Boston. (These figures do not represent the total number of students with special needs being served by these districts, since these students may attend a regular school for part of the day and be counted in membership there, and attend another school, as needed.)

School Size, Measured by Student Membership

The mean size of schools in the 55 largest school districts, measured by student membership, ranges from a high of 1,094 in Gwinnett County to a low of 498 in the District of Columbia. Gwinnett County also has the highest median school size, with 1,039 students. The Boston school district has the lowest median student membership per school, at 393. (The median school size across all school districts in the United States is 420 and the mean is 499.)

While measure of central tendency (i.e., mean and median) can serve as useful indicators of the size of a district's "typical" school, they do not show the wide range of school size within given districts. The minimum school size (student membership) across the 55 largest school districts ranges from a low of four in the Mesa Unified (Arizona) school district to a high of 436 in the Jordan (Utah) school district. Table 4 shows the highest and lowest decile and quartile of the school-size distribution within districts, along with the mean, standard deviation, and median, to adjust for the impact of very small and very large schools within districts. At the 10th percentile--or the smallest schools in the school districts--the range is from a low of 197 students in the Boston school district to 714 in the Mesa Unified school district. At the 90th percentile--the largest schools in the school districts--the range is from a low of 771 in the District of Columbia to 2,081 in Los Angeles. Consequently, it is relatively clear, by all measures, that the District of Columbia has the smallest schools among the 55 school districts. However, selection of the largest schools among these 55 districts depends on the measure: Gwinnett County has generally larger schools, while Los Angeles has wider variation across all schools (their largest schools are larger than those in the other districts).

Student Characteristics

New information provided by State education agencies for schools during the 1987-88 school year included the number of students in membership, by racial/ethnic category and by those eligible for free lunch. The free lunch program eligibility information is based on a formula used by all States and is a measure of socioeconomic status of the student populations of individual schools. Thirty-four States were able to provide racial/ethnic data, and 18 States provided counts of students eligible for free lunch.

For the 55 largest school districts, racial/ethnic information is available for 39 school districts and free-lunch-eligibility counts for 19 school districts. While a complete picture of these key student characteristics cannot be drawn for all districts, the data are presented to illustrate, within the limits of the available data, the diverse student populations served by these school districts.

The number of students eligible for free lunch, as a percentage of membership, varies considerably for the 19 school districts for which data are available. The data range from a high of 73 percent in Orleans Parish in Louisiana to a low of 3 percent in Gwinnett County. Within Georgia, the range is from a high of 60 percent in Atlanta City to 3 percent in Gwinnett County, with Dekalb County falling between those two with 18 percent.

The racial/ethnic distributions for the 39 school districts for which data are available also show considerable variation among the districts. Four districts have student populations with at least 90 percent classified into one racial/ethnic category: the District of Columbia--91 percent black, non-Hispanic; and Jefferson County (Colorado), Granite (Utah), and Jordan (Utah)--90 percent, 93 percent, and 95 percent, respectively, white, non-Hispanic.

Another 10 school districts have at least 70 percent (but less than 90 percent) of their student populations classified into one racial/ethnic category: Asian/Pacific Islander--Hawaii, 72 percent; Hispanic--El Paso, 71 percent, and San Antonio, 80 percent; black, non-Hispanic--Detroit, 89 percent, Memphis, 78 percent; and Cleveland, 70 percent; and white, non-Hispanic--Clark County (Nevada), 73 percent; Pinellas County (Florida), 80 percent; Polk County (Florida), 74 percent; Wake County (North Carolina), 71 percent; and Mesa Unified, 86 percent.

Four of the California school districts have student populations primarily dispersed across four racial/ethnic categories:

[In percent]

San Diego	18	22	16	43
Long Beach	20	26	19	36
San Francisco	46	18	20	15
Fresno	15	33	11	40

Six districts have student populations primarily dispersed across three racial/ethnic categories. (Three of these districts are in Texas.)

[In percent]

Boston	19	48	25

Methodology

This report is based on information from the 1987-88 school year Common Core of Data (CCD) series collected annually by the National Center for Education Statistics. The tables present information for each of the 55 largest public elementary and secondary local education agencies (public school districts) as supplied to NCES by State education agency officials. In addition, a listing of the 500 largest school districts in the United States and the outlying areas is provided in the appendix.

Two CCD surveys are the sources of data for this report. The "Public Elementary and Secondary Education Agency Universe" survey provided general information and information about 1987 graduates for each school district, and the "Public Elementary and Secondary School universe" survey provided data on student membership, free-lunch-eligible students, and race/ethnicity for individual schools within each district. Responses to these surveys were due from State education agencies to NCES on March 15, 1988. The data used in this report represent information incorporated into the two files as of September 2, 1988.

Data were provided by State education agencies from their administrative records. NCES and the State education agencies work cooperatively to assure comparability between data elements requested and reported. In December of 1987, each State's CCD Coordinator was sent a copy of their previous year's file on either computer printout or data tape, according to the State's preference or capability. In turn, the CCD Coordinator updated that data with current available information and returned it to NCES.

Related Information

Other reoprts from the Common Core of Data recently released by NCES include the Directory of Public Elementary and Secondary Education Agencies: Spring 1988 (lists all education agencies in the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and outlying areas, with addresses and basic organizational information); and "Public Elementary and Secondary School Membership, Graduates, and Staff, 1987-88" (contains official State-level statistics on teachers, students, and staff in the Nation's public schools).

Response Rates

As a result of the positive response of education officials in all States to the Center's request for data, the files used for this report contain information for all 50 States, the District of Columbia, and five outlying areas (American Samoa, Guam, Commonwealth of Northern Marianas, Puerto Rico, and Virgin Islands). Data supplied from the outlying areas are not included in the tables, but are included in the list of 500 largest school districts (in the appendix).

Definitions and Abbreviations

PK--prekindergarten.

K--kindergarten.

Schools not having student membership--in some cases, student membership is not attributed to schools that provide special or vocational education or other specialized programs, since the students being served are already counted in the school primarily serving their attendance area. Several of the tables in this report are based on schools with membership attributes. Where the counts are based on this figure, the term "schools having membership" is used to note that the figure does not represent all schools in a district.
